

Ignacio Galán, executive chairman of Iberdrola

In recent months, also thanks to the impetus of the European Commission, valuable decisions have been taken, but it has also become clear that all member states need to work in a coordinated way to complete the single energy market in Europe.

I believe that when we strengthen the Union all European allies - and the citizens of the continent - become stronger. I believe that the measures announced today by the Prime Minister's government are initiatives in the right direction.

This effort must also be shared by companies and administrations. And that is why, in response to its clear and stable regulations, Iberdrola wants to go a step further in its commitment to Portugal and its citizens.

That is why, in response to the policies put in place, and as I said in Ribeira da Pena, we are ready to invest up to an additional €3 billion in Portugal in the coming years. I would like to be able to do this during his term of office and to be able to do many more inaugurations, like the one we did in Ribeira da Pena.
