Ignacio Galán: "Iberdrola's long-term strategy is fully aligned with the Paris Agreement's most ambitious scenarios"

The Climate Summit (COP) will meet until 12 November in Glasgow, attended by representatives of most governments, experts, non-governmental organisations and executives from major multinational companies to tackle mankind's greatest challenge: climate change.

The chairman of the Iberdrola Group, Ignacio Galán, who has taken part in all the COPs held since 2009, has an active role in this United Nations event, "a milestone for demonstrating our commitment after more than 20 years of decarbonisation", with an investment of more than 120 bn euros.

"Iberdrola's long-term strategy is fully aligned with the Paris Agreement's most ambitious scenarios; with the largest investment in renewable energies, networks, storage, green hydrogen and electrification solutions for sectors like transport and industry", Galán explains.

The chairman of the Iberdrola group is urging all agents, countries and sectors to act during the coming decade, which will be crucial. "Together, we can make a real difference", he says.
