Comprehensive plan in response to the COVID-19 virus

A total of 107 measures have been implemented by the group worldwide during the pandemic, during which more than 90% of office staff are working from home and the work of outside personnel at power stations and transmission and distribution networks has been reorganised.

At the beginning of this health crisis, Iberdrola also notified health departments in autonomous communities of its global action programme in response to the COVID-19 coronavirus, which included a plan for hospital services in Spain to ensure flows of supplies and supply quality, as well as the deployment of new facilities to reinforce the service. The company has also donated 8,000 blankets to field hospitals and nursing homes.

"This comprehensive plan is enabling us to guarantee the continuity of the electricity supply to the population as a whole, while reinforcing crucial infrastructures such as hospitals and health centres with human and technical resources," said Iberdrola chairman Ignacio Galán during last week's Shareholders General Meeting, held fully online.

In short, Iberdrola's response to the COVID-19 crisis is "entirely consistent" with the model that it has been applying for decades, geared to sustainable value creation for shareholders, employees and society in general.
